UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE
ARTHUR A. GLADSTONE, M.D., F.A.C.S., F.A.Pr.S.

In recognition of the kind friendship and wise counsel he has offered so many students; of the perspicuous guidance he has given to the expansion of the staff and facilities of this medical center;
and of the example he has provided of the selfless administrator, warm human being, and devoted physician -
- the Class of 1960 dedicates this book.
ETIOLOGY . . . . The Class of 1960 of the University of Vermont College of Medicine came together for the first time in the fall of 1956. We represented the products of many Eastern states including Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, and, of course, Vermont. What the "etiological agent" was that had "infected" us with the desire to become physicians was, indeed, as varied as our backgrounds.

Thus we met for that first September convocation—eager, for the most part, but certainly unsuspecting concerning what lay ahead. Yet, in retrospect, one recalls that perhaps the "mountains of medical learning" were not as immovable as we at that time had imagined.

PATHOGENESIS . . . . One wonders sometimes what it is that makes a class a class—or rather, what binds this diversified group into a unit with a sense of common loyalty. Perhaps in our case, it was (or is) the common aims in the minds of us all. At any rate, in but a few short weeks of that first year of medical college, we seemed to develop an awareness of identification with the group—the Class of 1960—. It was in this our class president a person who was to over the next four years—Bill Doolittle—. short-lived and we soon found ourselves learning the basic medical sciences. As cally into that of the second year, we of our growth and maturation.

It did not seem possible that the time could have sped by so rapidly, but by the spring of 1958, we were the proud pos-incubation period that we elected as serve and represent us so superbly. However, the "incubation period" was swept up in the demanding task of the first year's material moved logi-began to more truly grasp the pattern.

Sessors of those small black bags and our side jacket pockets. We are re-sitions with the long and verbose lously detailed physicals.

CLINICAL COURSE . . . . September of 1958 marked something of a milestone in our medical college careers. We recall quite well the first few days in those coveted white uniforms. At this point, we had begun to sense that a goal was in view and that the thought of graduation had meaning for us. The beginning of our clinical training brought with it an entirely new and vastly interesting experience.

As we came to be able to do more and more with our minds and our hands, we began to gain the confidence necessary in our chosen profession. The clinical years were good years. We can look back on them now and recall the noon lectures, the Saturday Grand Rounds, the tutor sessions, and the attendings' rounds and, of course, the oral examinations.

Our clinical course was not unlike that of so many previous classes. Our class and the many before us are well aware of the debt of gratitude which we owe to those members of our faculty who took such special interest in our training. To them we shall always remain grateful.

PROGNOSIS . . . . The natural history of the Class of 1960 is incomplete. What the future will bring is not known. At best, we can only try to imagine what the graduates of this class will do in Medicine. One can say with certainty that the broad scope of Medicine offers unlimited opportunities for us all. We have been prepared well to meet that challenge of the future. Whether or not we realize the full measure of our capabilities rests in our own hands.

Among the many pleasant privileges which go along with being a Dean is the request to say something in speech or writing.

If a faculty or community member asks, it is one thing, but if the students ask, the responsibility becomes challenging to say the least.

The odds are that the Dean’s peers will leave the scene in reasonable proportion before he does. The students, however, become posterity. Writing or speaking for posterity is difficult. When responsibility becomes excessive, the only solution is to divide it. I therefore call your attention to all the men who are your teachers. Some you will forget, others you will remember with pride, still others with affection and some with fear. The forgotten may return, the proud may fall, the friend may prove false, and the fearsome may prove to have been your friend.

Don't decide now. Wait.

THE INTERNAL CLOCK

The ability to judge intervals of time is a basic mental function. In order to learn how drugs affect this “internal clock,” SK&F scientists use a test in which a monkey must hit a lever after an interval of 20 seconds to obtain food.

When he is under the influence of certain drugs, “time flies” and he misses the pay-off period by hitting the lever too late. Other drugs make “time drag” and he misses the pay-off period by hitting the lever too soon.

Because one of the characteristics of many mental disorders is a distortion of the time sense, observing how drugs affect this primary psychological process may reveal valuable information that will help SK&F scientists in discovering effective treatments for mental illness.
