Problem Identification

Many patients in Vermont need to seek abortion care outside of their regular doctors office. Some patients may feel uncomfortable or ashamed to talk with their doctor. When a patient discovers that she is pregnant there should be a non-biased conversation about options as part of The Patient Centered Medical Home. There are no informational handouts in PRISM that provide resources including where to get an abortion, how to decide what your options are, the cost of an abortion, or warnings about biased organizations that may compromise a patient’s health.

• Nearly half of pregnancies among American women in 2011 were unintended, and about four in 10 of these were terminated by abortion. [1]
• In 2010, 46% of all pregnancies (4,000) in Vermont were unintended [2]
• In 2010, 51% of unintended pregnancies in Vermont resulted in births and 35% in abortions; the remainder resulted in miscarriages. [2]
• The teen pregnancy rate in Vermont was 32 per 1,000 women aged 15–19 in 2010. [3]
• In 2011, 79% of Vermont counties had no abortion clinic. 51% of Vermont women lived in these counties. [4]
Forty-nine percent of abortion patients in 2014 had incomes of less than 100% of the federal poverty level ($11,670 for a single adult with no children). [5]

In Vermont in 2010, the federal and state governments spent $31.4 million on unintended pregnancies; of this, $21.8 million was paid by the federal government and $9.6 million was paid by the state. [6]

The total public costs for unintended pregnancies in 2010 was $265 per woman aged 15–44 in Vermont, compared with $201 per woman nationally. [6]

In 2013, 35,860 Vermont women aged 13–44 were in need of publicly funded family planning services. [7]
Community Perspective

• Vermont in one of the few states with minimal restrictions on using mifepristone and misoprostol for abortion care. Furthermore, Vermont allows nurse practitioners and physician’s assistants to prescribe abortion medication. However, there remains a delay in the use of these drugs in practices outside of Planned Parenthood. In various practices around Vermont, credentialing affects the ease of initiating this type of treatment and political factors may influence a providers willingness to prescribe. – Clara Keegan, MD.

• We assume that many people know to go to Planned Parenthood for these kinds of services, but, especially for adolescents, the information on where to go for help and who to talk to during this difficult time should be made clear. – Jennifer Bamford, MD.

Caution:
There are some places out there that call themselves clinics, but don’t actually perform abortions. These “Crisis Pregnancy Centers” are often listed in phone books under Abortion or Abortion Alternatives. They also show up when you do Internet searches for “abortion.” They often will offer you free pregnancy tests or free ultrasounds, but the people who perform these services are not doctors. The crisis pregnancy centers are anti-abortion and they will try to convince you not to have an abortion, often by giving you false information about the risks or costs of abortion. To protect yourself, you should never give your medical information to anyone who is not a doctor or working for a doctor’s office.

Created by Andre Robinson, UVM College of Medicine Class of 2018. Current as of: September 27, 2016

• I created a simple, easy to read handout for pregnant patients who want information on abortion care and their options.

• I published the article in PRISM under the SmartPhrase “.ABORTIONRESOURCES” and informed the providers at UVMMC-Berlin Family Practice of its utility.
Results

• My proposal for measuring the effectiveness of this project would be qualitative:

• I would like to survey local Planned Parenthood providers to determine if initiating abortion care within The Patient Centered Medical Home helps destigmatize abortion.

• I am curious if this gesture of trying to bridge connect local Family Medicine providers with Planned Parenthood employees will help build rapport and trust between the two entities that will eventually lead to collaboration in supporting women’s health. This will be measured over time.
Limitations

• This intervention requires that the provider feels comfortable discussing abortion. Political and ethical factors may prevent some providers from inviting a conversation about voluntary termination of pregnancy.

• The intervention’s quality relies on keeping telephone numbers and websites up to date.

• Resources available in the handout require access to a telephone or the internet.
Future Projects

1. I feel optimistic about the future of early abortions being provided by Family Medicine doctors in Vermont. Adding a list of providers specifically for medication abortion care would then be appropriate.

2. Pending the opening of The Family Planning Clinic (run by Clara Keegan, MD) in Burlington Vermont, another opportunity will arise. A future project may identify similarities between this clinic and Planned Parenthood, which could allow a streamlined referral system for patients to various locations, depending on where they live. This would help bridge the gap between Family Medicine and abortion care/Planned Parenthood.
